NASA Captures radar images of Asteroid

Asteroid 2005 YU55 passed by Earth Tuesday at a distance closer than the moons orbit. NASA made Radar observations from the Arecibo Planetary Radar Facility in Puerto Rico and the Deep Space Network antenna in California.

Radar images and even a movie taken from the California antenna have already been posted on the NASA website and are definitely cool to check out!

I DON'T KNOW WHO WON YET! But the rest of you do. Funny little thing about talking to people in the future. Hope you all had a good game night and will have an even better one next Thursday!

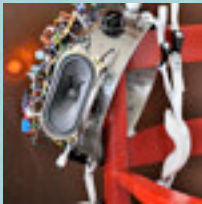

NEW FRIDGE! Keep it clean keep it nice. Sodas will be stocked soon and storage space for supplies for those marathon study sessions is in abundance. Anyone else wanna decorate it?

BRAIN TEASER! 20,000 lights hang, on, from the ceiling of a long hallway. A person walks down the hallway turning off every second light. Another person pulling the chord every third, etc. Which lights will be on at the end?

WEATHER CORNER

* Is it thanksgiving yet? Should I have put a turkey somewhere on here? I stand by my decision.

I realize you don't need Thursdays weather anymore but it needs to be symmetric. Plus it makes for a more accurate picture of 2011 weather for future archivers of the Naked Singularity.
